A search of the residence of Senor de Herrera resulted in the discovery of a with neighboring towns were futile and number of commissions for officers who were to organize an army in the State of Kunani. The commissions bore the stamp of that state.

The Brazilian minister here confirms the discovery of the plot. A published detail taken from the captured documents shows that the plot was financed by a committee having headuarters in Lon-don, and which had long been working for the independence of the Kunani territory. This territory is between the northern frontier of Brazil and French

It is stated that the committee, with a riew to controlling the gold mines of Kunani, had been organizing an insurrection and had recruited men in England, France and Spain, who were repre-sented as colonists, but, who, in reality were intended eventually to become sol-

Documents taken from De Herrera's residence show that organization was proceeding on a vast scale and that nearly 4,000 men had already been recruited in England, 4,000 in France and 4,000 in Spain, among the last named being included many Spanish reserve officers, some of whom are actually serving as active officers. An ex-revolutionary Spanish captain, who headed the rising in Badajos in 1883, holds a commission of colonel in the future army of Kunani, and it is stated that he is already receiving pay through an English banking-house, at which funds are deposited. De Herrera styled himself minister

It is believed there were five men in the band. That all were heavily armed was shown by the frequency of their fire when the villagers arrived near the bank. The men first pried open the glimmered in the village, and they evidently set about their work leisurely. Two holes were drilled into the heavy steel door of the newly installed safe and into these the explosives, believed to have been nitroglycerine, was inserted. The explosion which followed wholly wrecked the safe and shattered every window in the bank bulding.

The robbers hastily gathered up the money exposed by the explosion and started on a run just as the first of the awakened villagers reached the secene. Other residents quickly came up, but in the mean time the invaders were making good their escape, firing as they went.
